6. Geneva Talks

The central position of the West at the Geneva Talks is to pin the Soviets to agreement for workable systems of inspection. Negatively, the western powers wish to insure that if the talks fail, the Soviets do not gain a propaganda advantage by appearing to be more flexible than the West. Though the Soviets have agreed to cease testing forever, they are vulnerable because they have not agreed to the establishment of an inspection system on their own territory which would insure that all illegal tests could be detected.
